

ΩΚΠΘΣ

Symphonic Metal

from Hanover

General Information:

Oknos guides into a fantastic universe of sounds, tears down the border between reality and fiction and lets the listener forget it's dreary daily life.

A solid, punchy sound, filled with hard riffs is accompanied by an epic orchestra and does it's part on the same amount as the expressive vocals and the powerful choirs.

Biography:

Inspired by great Symphonic Metal Bands like Nightwish and Delain, music student Johannes Erdmann decided one day to follow suit and founded a band.

With Benjamin Offeney playing guitar, Arne Kinast as bass guitar player and Sebastian Brunn at the drums he soon found like-minded musicians. A short time after, singer Anna-Kristina Linnemann joined them, and the story could begin. In summer 2015, in the middle of the recording of the first album, Philipp Schröder joined the band and supported them at the keys.

Founded in 2013, the members of Oknos soon started writing their own songs and recording them, so that they could play their first small gigs in 2014. From winter 2014 until winter 2015 the recording of the album "Old World" took place. After mixing and mastering of "Old World" at Private Universe in Wolfsburg, the album was released by the label FemMeropa.

In their songs Oknos tell stories about love, adventure, death and hope. "Old World" is a concept album with the central topic of a tragic love story and the philosophic question of what would be possible, if you could change the past – would there be the chance to make things right or would all end in tears again?

Since September 2018 Oknos and their former singer Anna are going separate ways.

Shortly after, the new singer Johanna was found, who supports the band with her expressive and powerful voice since then.

At the moment Oknos are focussed on working on their next album, which will not be a concept album again and will deal with darker topics than "Old World" did.

There are already some gigs planned for 2019 and for sure there will follow more.
